Answer 2

FALSE

- ▶ While this can be a challenging issue, a number of federal district court cases have attempted to clarify the conditions under which school officials can discipline students for off-campus behavior. For example, in J.S. v. Bethlehem Area School District (2000), the court made it clear that schools do have the authority to discipline students when speech articulated or behavior committed off-campus results in a clear disruption of the school environment. If any off-campus behavior results in a substantial disruption at school, they can intervene.
- ▶ Moreover, if students are denied the opportunity to learn in a safe environment (because of cyberbullying), school officials who fail to act may also be found liable under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and/or Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972.

cyberbullying

Answer 5

FALSE

- ▶ While most of the harm associated with cyberbullying is emotional, relational, or psychological (all important harms to prevent) there are many examples where cyberbullying has resulted in very serious physical consequences for victims. The most extreme example of this is the several cases reported in the media of adolescents committing suicide after experiencing cyberbullying. While the cyberbullying alone probably did not cause the suicide, it clearly was an important contributing factor in several incidents.

More studies have reported either that girls are more likely to be victims or that there are no gender differences in cyberbullying. When looking at lifetime experiences versus more recent experiences, the prevalence rates are even higher for girls. For more information, see the articles below.

Statement 10

- ▶ Research has shown that utilizing blocking and filtering software decreases the likelihood of experiencing cyberbullying.

cyberbullying
research center

Answer 10

FALSE

- ▶ According to an article published in Journal of Child Psychology and Psychiatry, using filtering software is not significantly related to a decreased chance of Internet harassment victimization. Some adults believe that by simply purchasing and installing such software, they have "done their part" in safeguarding their child's participation online. This is naive and unwise. It is really important to actively participate in your child's online experiences, establish rules, and informally monitor their activities. Software solutions only go so far in controlling certain actions in cyberspace, and can be circumvented by a motivated adolescent.

Ways of interrupting Bias

Responding to Bias Bullying Behavior

Responding to Bias Bullying Behavior

1. Listen and try to understand what the person is saying.
2. Paraphrase what is being said.
3. Share how you feel about the comment or behaviour. “I” Statements can be helpful here.
4. Ask questions to clarify what is being said or felt, why the person feels that way, and where the person got the information.
5. Let the person know it is the comment or behaviour, which is problematic, not the person. It helps to recognize that bias is learned, not something with which we are born.
6. By speaking to a person in private, we take away the element of embarrassment or shame for being criticized in public.
7. Remaining calm, non-judgemental, and caring is an important element of effectively responding to bias. Responding aggressively is likely to escalate the bias.
8. Sometimes we may need to take the time to become calm before discussing the bias.
9. Offering alternative information concerning the bias is sometimes effective.
10. Dialogue, restorative justice and some forms of mediation may also help.
11. Asking for specific guidelines might be an outcome of an agreement; e.g., “I agree not to make biased comments around you.”
